TRANSFORMING LIVES

Last fall, Black Hills State University broke ground on its Alumni Foundation Welcome Center. Construction on the $1.4 million project began this summer. When completed, the facility will house the University Advancement offices, and be a place for alumni and community events; a gathering area before games, concerts and other University events; a place to showcase the history of BHSU; a space for prospective students and their parents, and an area for community events such as business meetings and receptions.

Greetings to all BHSU alumni.

It's an exciting time at Black Hills State University, and I'm looking forward to the 2013-2014 school year. We have a number of new academic programs, including a master's degree in sustainability that was developed to meet a growing need for professionals in this emerging field. Our Industrial Technology program has been completely reconfigured and renamed Engineering Technology to address changing workforce needs.

On campus, you'll see signs of growth with the construction of the Alumni Foundation Welcome Center and Crow Peak Hall, a new residence hall that will connect Heidepriem Hall and Thomas Hall with a central living area to create a new residence hall complex known as The Peaks. Work on the Alumni Foundation Welcome Center, located next to Lyle Hare Stadium, began this summer with completion expected by Swarm Day 2014. Construction of the Crow Peak Residence Hall will begin in Spring 2014.

Our vision is to be recognized as an innovative, high-quality University. We know the best way to earn that recognition is through the accomplishments of our students, alumni and employees. That is the true measure of our success.

As you read this magazine, you will find great articles highlighting these accomplishments. Please take time to read through the successes of our students, faculty and alumni and see how BHSU continues to transform lives. It's gratifying to know that BHSU provides a strong foundation for these lifelong achievements.

Sincerely,

President Kay Schallenkamp

Suspended thousands of feet above the canyon bottom, clinging to a frozen waterfall with an ice axe in each hand, Dawn meticulously navigates the slick areas working her way up the icy mountainside with only a harness and a rope keeping her from plummeting to the canyon floor.

It's a dangerous, yet thrilling job, and one that the Black Hills State University alumna looks forward to every day. Dawn Glanc, Class of '98, is a professional climber and certified mountain and alpine guide whose passion for climbing started while studying outdoor education at BHSU. She now travels around the country sharing her love of climbing with others.

"I really enjoy sharing the thing that is my 100 percent passion," she said. "It is really fun to share that spark; it rejuvenates my love for it too."

Originally from Brunswick, Ohio,

Dawn initially attended Kent State, but soon felt a pull toward a different direction. She decided to pursue a degree in outdoor education and began searching for schools in the western part of the country. During a 13-day motorcycle ride with her dad, Dawn

"It was the perfect place, perfect fit for me. I needed a place like the Black Hills. It provided the perfect playground for me to learn all the things I do now" visited schools in Wyoming, Colorado and Montana. The final stop on their trek back to Ohio was a stop in South Dakota. Dawn's dad was stationed at Ellsworth Air Force Base in 1971 and wanted to see how the Black Hills had changed since the 1972 flood.

-Dawn Glanc

"I was sad to leave the (Rocky) Mountains. I had never seen anything like that before. But when we drove into Spearfish that night and the sun was setting over Crow Peak, I thought 'I could do this place,'" Dawn said.

After meeting with her outdoor education advisor, Jan Goliher, Dawn became even more confident in her decision to attend BHSU. "It was the perfect place, perfect fit for me," she said. "I needed a place like the Black Hills. It provided the perfect playground for me to learn all the things I do now."

Dawn instantly engulfed herself into the local climbing community. One of the first people she met worked at a local outdoor store and introduced her to both rock and ice climbing. Although Dawn had been climbing a few times in Ohio, she lacked knowledge of the sport.

"I didn't know anything when I moved to the Black Hills," she said. "I had great people to take me under their wings."

After graduation, Dawn continued to live and work in the Black Hills, taking every moment she could to go climbing and explore new terrain. She was hired at Ellsworth Air Force Base to be the outdoor recreation program director where she designed and guided outdoor programs.

Dawn got her first taste of being a climbing guide when she was asked by a Spearfish outdoor store to help guide. "They needed someone to help with a kids group," she said. "It was fun, and I had a good time."

She then worked for a while for a guide at Sylvan Lake.

After eight years in the Black Hills, Dawn left her job at Ellsworth to pursue a full-time career as a mountain guide for the American Alpine Institute in Bellingham, Wash., during which time she became an American Mountain Guides Association (AGMA) certified guide.

"I don't know how I had the courage to do it," Dawn said of leaving a secure federal job with benefits for a migratory life of climbing and guiding. But it's a decision she wouldn't change.

Dawn continues to work full-time as a guide for San Juan Mountain Guides, LLC and Chicks Climbing: Chicks with Picks and Chicks Rock. Although she now bases herself out of Ouray, Colo., home of the world famous Ouray Ice Park and the annual Ouray Ice Festival, Dawn climbs and guides year around all over the world. She has been rock climbing in Canada, Greece, Croatia, Montenegro, and Sardinia and ice climbing in Canada, France, Norway, and Iceland. Her favorite climbing destination is Iceland where she hopes to travel a third time this winter. Whenever she can, she travels with her husband, Patrick Ormond, who is also a mountain climbing guide.

Dawn said she loves being a part of the climbing community wherever she goes. It is one of the many things that fuels her passion for the sport.

"I love the people I climb with and the places climbing has taken me," Dawn said. "Climbing gives me something - a feeling - that nothing else gives me. That something happens when all the stars align, and I climb unhindered with complete confidence. It's that moment of complete focus that I enjoy. I climb because I am constantly seeking that focus to help me push what I can do. It is a passion that is driven by that simple moment in time."

Dawn has also competed in the Ouray Ice Festival, North America's largest ice festival, seven times, winning the women's division in 2009 and 2011. She plans on competing again in January. She also won first place at the 2012 Teva Winter Games.

While there is risk and fear in climbing, especially when the weather does not cooperate, Dawn said it is all a part of the sport.

"There are days that I try to push my limits," she said noting that if you are going to go you have to go 100 percent.

Dawn does not plan on hanging up her climbing equipment anytime soon, but she does hope to someday add in another passion of hers - sports nutrition. "I am really passionate about health and taking care of yourself and living your life with as much fullness as you can."

A motto Dawn lives by every day.

South Dakota governor presents Chad Coppess with state award

Chad Coppess

Chad Coppess, Class of '85, was presented with the 2013 A.H. Pankow Award by South Dakota Gov. Dennis Daugaard. The award recognizes a member of the broadcast or print media or public relations industry who has shown superior interest in and coverage of the South Dakota visitor industry.

Past recipients include Kevin Costner, Laura Ingalls Wilder, and filmmaker Ken Burns.

The BHSU photography graduate is the senior photographer for the South Dakota Office of Tourism and travels the state photographing fairs, festivals, rodeos, historic sites, nature, wildlife and other tourist attractions. His photos have provided the visual identity of visitor promotions in the state for nearly two decades.

His images have appeared in National Geographic Traveler, USA Today, the "South Dakota 24/7" coffee table book, and websites for Chrysler Corporation and MTV in Italy.

Chad's photos have been exhibited at the South Dakota State Capitol, the National Museum of Wildlife Art in Jackson, Wyo., and the Denver Art Museum. Chad also publishes a photography blog, www.dakotagraph.com, with tips and ideas for exploring South Dakota.

Kjaersti Roberts honored with Crystal Apple Award by Oregon School District

Kjaersti Roberts

Throughout her seven years teaching at Brixner Jr. High, Kjaersti has been involved in many programs designed to provide extra assistance to struggling students including: school district tutor for expelled students; member of the Positive Behavior Intervention Support committee; and head of Wednesday School, an academic and behavior afterschool program. She also piloted an English Filter class for failing students

This was the first time the district has given out the Crystal Apple Awards which highlight the skills and leadership of district educators who transform the lives of the students daily.

For Kjaersti, teaching is not simply helping students succeed in class, but providing them the tools to be successful throughout their lives.

"As much as content and passing state tests are important to their education so is learning how to be a life-long learner," said the BHSU alumna. "I am passionate about giving my students life-long skills that encourage learning. I want them to be problem solvers, critical thinkers and make discoveries."

Kjaersti, who grew up in Rapid City, earned her bachelor of science in English education in 2001 and her master of science in curriculum and instruction in 2007.

Kelly Meeker tackles the world of entrepreneurial football coaching

Kelly Meeker, Class of '04, has always loved football. His passion for the sport, especially the position of quarterback, has now led him on a unique business path.

Kelly has turned his hobby of coaching quarterbacks into a traveling business. The Air Attack Academy is a football skill development camp that Kelly started to coach young quarterbacks throughout eastern South Dakota. His idea has now evolved into a mobile camp with coaches that specialize in all positions.

Kelly was a quarterback for the BHSU Yellow Jackets, and that experience led a co-worker at Dakota Beverage, where he is a sales representative, to ask Kelly if he'd be willing to coach his son on the finer aspects of the quarterback position. It didn't take long before he was coaching several aspiring quarterbacks, as well as receiving requests to work with running backs and wide receivers. It was at this point that Kelly's hobby developed into a business—Air Attack Academy. With his experience focused on quarterbacks, Kelly hired running back and wide receiver coaches to help.

The mobile training unit features a 92-inch projection screen and air conditioning on the inside, which provides Kelly and his coaches a facility to evaluate the athletes' progress no matter where they go. Air Attack focuses on developing proper mechanics for each position.

Susan Ricci preserves legacy of American bison

Susan Ricci

Susan Ricci, class of '03, whose passion for the American bison led her to found the Museum of the American Bison in Rapid City – a place dedicated to educating the public about the animal's historical significance and ability to survive.

After several years working with nonprofits, Susan got burnt out. She wanted to do something different. Her inspiration came after she received a historic preservation grant from a proposal she wrote as part of a project for a class taught by Dr. Robert Campbell, BHSU associate professor of history. With a love of history and the motivation that she could succeed, Susan decided to set off on a new adventure.

Six months later, Susan took over the building in the heart of historic downtown Rapid City that is now the Museum of the American Bison.

According to Susan, in the months since the museum has been open, they've had more than 2,000 visitors from all over the world and the response has been great.

Aside from Susan's museum, there is only one other museum in the nation dedicated to American bison history - The National Buffalo Museum in Jamestown, N.D.

Susan's museum features exhibits for visitors of all ages including a dig site where children unearth bison bones; a "tracks and scat" table which educates visitors on wildlife indigenous to the bison habitat; an art gallery with current bison projects taking place in the Dakotas and Montana; and the star of the museum, Bruno, a full-sized mounted bull.

Susan's board of directors includes one of her former BHSU history professors, Dr. Mitchell Stone who serves as president; Donovin Sprague, BHSU adjunct instructor; and two wildlife biologists who specialize in bison ecology.

Joey Painter receives the 2013 Spirit of BH award

Joey Painter and Lori Caldwell

Joey Painter, 2013 business administration–marketing graduate from Buffalo, was honored with the 2013 Spirit of BH Award.

The award is presented annually during the Student Volunteer Awards Celebration to a student who has made significant contributions that reflect favorably on the University as well as the community.

Joey has been an ambassador for the University both on and off campus all while maintaining an excellent grade point average. She balances her academic responsibilities while competing as part of the BHSU Rodeo Team, serving as a Presidential Student Ambassadors, and working as a student technology fellow.

In 2009, Joey enrolled at BHSU and was awarded the Joe and Elaine Floyd and the Black Hills Stock Show Foundation scholarships.

Joey is a four-time qualifier at the College National Finals Rodeo and in 2012 was crowned the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association national champion in the breakaway roping event. In 2013 she finished the regular season in first place in the Great Plains Region in both the all-around and goat tying and third in the breakaway.

John Fitzgerald, Class of '77, has earned the honor of being named 2012 State of South Dakota Prosecutor of the Year by the South Dakota Attorney's Association.

The award, established

South Dakota prosecutor who has performed exceptional prosecutorial service to the citizens of the state and to the association.

John has been prosecuting crime for more than 32 years in western South Dakota working to seek justice and advocate for the victims' rights. During his three decades as a state prosecutor, John has argued hundreds of cases from death penalty to embezzlers.

John, who graduated from BHSU with a bachelor in social science, began prosecuting in 1981 as the Butte County State's Attorney. In 1990, he started working as a part-time Deputy State's Attorney in Lawrence County under State's Attorney Jeff Bloomberg. In 1995, John took office as the Lawrence County State's Attorney and has held that position since.

Graduates encouraged to become productive global citizens

Thousands of family, friends, faculty, and staff packed into the Donald E. Young Sports and Fitness Center to wish good luck to the more than 400 BHSU graduates awarded master, bachelor and associate degrees during the 165th Commencement Ceremony.

Thirty-four Native American students were awarded master, bachelor and associate degrees, the highest number in the University's history. The graduating class also included international students from Peru, Vietnam, Korea, Japan and Sweden.

Dr. John Alsup, BHSU professor of mathematics and Faculty Senate president, gave the keynote address encouraging students to live life to the fullest and be thankful for what they have. "Life is an adventure and full of opportunities. Life is rich," he said. "What you have to look forward to is amazing."

Chantelle Whipple's college experience was unlike most. Three times a week she was up at 6:30 a.m. for ROTC physical fitness training; once a week she had a ROTC lab, repelling a wall or building a one rope bridge; and once a month she was fulfilling her obligations with the National Guard; all while maintaining a 3.96 GPA. Whipple's schedule has not eased since graduating with her bachelor of arts in Spanish. She signed up for another six years of active duty and is in flight school at the U.S. Army Aviation Center at Fort Rucker, Ala.

Devin Lynn, mass communication and history graduate, did everything he could to make a difference not only on campus but locally, regionally, nationally and around the world. Lynn was accepted to the Clinton Global Initiative two years in a row, including this spring when he presented his project of using social media to connect students and entrepreneurs in Uganda with BHSU staff and faculty. He is now in graduate school studying political science at the University of Colorado-Denver.

Since graduating with a degree in business administration—entrepreneurial studies and marketing, Markus Heinrich has focused his attention on expanding several of the businesses he started while a student at BHSU. Currently he has three businesses: Top Lawn, Cans2Cans Recycling and his most recent venture Breaktime Vending.

Rilda Means has known what she has wanted to do since she was a junior at Red Cloud Indian School – help change the stigma of the Pine Ridge Reservation. Means, who graduated with her bachelor of science in political science and American Indian Studies, is now in graduate school at Oglala Lakota College studying Lakota Leadership and Management and then plans to enroll in law school.

Construction on BHSU campus a sign of growth

Architectural rendering of the Alumni Foundation Welcome Center

Several new construction projects are underway at Black Hills State University as the University continues its effort to provide not only innovative academic programs but also high-quality facilities for its students and alumni.

Construction began this summer on the Alumni Foundation Welcome Center located next to the Lyle Hare Stadium which saw its own upgrades this year. BHSU broke ground on the $1.4 million, 5,800-square-foot center last fall. Contractors are in the process of working on the foundation for the center which will house the University Advancement Office and be a place for alumni and community events, gatherings before games, concerts and other University events; a place to showcase the history of BHSU; a space for prospective student and their parents; and an area for community events such as business meetings and receptions.

"The project will take longer than usual because many of the workers are donating their time," according to Steve Meeker, vice president of University Advancement.

"We've raised over $800,000 in cash, with donations continuing to roll in for the center, and we have a lot of businesses that have indicated they will be donating in-kind," Meeker says. Donations can be made in the form of purchasing an engraved pathway brick to be displayed on the patio, or a donor may have one of the center's rooms named in their honor by donating $15,000.

Plans also are moving forward on Crow Peak Hall, a new residence hall that will connect Heidepriem and Thomas Halls with a central living area to create a new residence hall complex known as the Peaks.

The nearly 50,000-square-foot Crow Peak Hall is estimated to break ground early next summer with a completion date of summer 2015. The connecting central living area, known as Lookout Lodge, will include a two-story great room, residential kitchen for student use, fireplace, snack area, and multi-media study rooms.

Longtime photography professor honored as Distinguished Faculty

Steve Babbitt, longtime professor of photography at BHSU, was recognized with the 2013 Distinguished Faculty Award – an honor bestowed upon Babbitt by his colleagues.

BHSU President Kay Schallenkamp and Dr. Rod Custer, provost and vice president of Academic Affairs, surprised Babbitt with the news during class.

"Steve Babbitt's enthusiasm and commitment to the study of photography creates an exceptional learning opportunity for Black Hills State University students. Steve is an accomplished photographer and remarkable professor who has shown tremendous dedication to his students, to his craft, and to the arts community in the region," says Schallenkamp.

Babbitt has been molding the minds of hundreds of BHSU mass communication students for more than 20 years, and has been instrumental in making the University's photography program the success it is today.

Several letters were received from professors across the many disciplines nominating Babbitt for the award noting his dedication to his students and the BHSU photography program.

Jerry Rawlings, assistant professor of photography, also noted that Babbitt is the only photographer granted access to photograph in the Sanford Underground Research Facility (SURF). Babbitt has been instrumental in fostering a strong relationship between the University and SURF, and his images are used for public relations purposes for both the lab and BHSU.

Babbitt is recognized for his professional photography and regularly shows his work in national and international exhibits and encourages his students to do the same.

Babbitt earned both his bachelor's and master's degrees in Fine Arts from San Francisco Art Institute. He joined the faculty at BHSU in 1994.

BHSU business team participates in national competition

Black Hills State University Enactus team at the national competition in Kansas City, Mo.

In May, the BHSU Enactus team competed with more than 150 colleges and universities during the Enactus National Exposition in Kansas City, Mo. The BHSU team earned its first trip to the national competition after winning regionals in Minneapolis earlier this year.

"Since this was the first time BHSU has competed in a National Exposition, we felt proud of our efforts and pleased for how we professionally showcased the projects we advanced this past year," said Dr. Bobbi Looney, assistant professor of management and co-advisor for the Enactus team.

Enactus is an international non-profit organization that brings together the top leaders of today and tomorrow to create a better, more sustainable world through the positive power of business.

During the last academic year, the BHSU Enactus team organized seven community outreach projects throughout Spearfish including a "Facebook for Retirees" workshop which was designed to assist senior citizens throughout the community with social media skills.

The team is already preparing for next year's nationals in St. Louis.

Student showcases rattlesnake research at state Capitol

Recent graduate Mallory (Ageton) Ballinger was one of a dozen undergraduate students who presented their research to state lawmakers in Pierre during the South Dakota Student Research Poster Session.

The annual event showcases students' research over a variety of disciplines and displays the important link between research and higher education.

Ballinger, who graduated with a bachelor of science in biology, joined BHSU biology professor Dr. Brian Smith's research team as a Biomedical Research Infrastructure Network (BRIN) Fellow in the summer of 2011.

Ballinger researched three groups of rattlesnakes, one from Colorado and two from the Black Hills, that are geographically widespread and vary in prey availability and habitat. Ballinger and the BHSU research team isolated proteins from venom of snakes from all the groups.

The proteins in venom interfere with locomotion functions of the prey that is bitten with some proteins causing shock faster.

The work conducted by Ballinger and the research team may help in the treatment of bites, as variation in venom components may affect the recovery of bite victims.

Concert Choir performs in Italy

The Black Hills State University Concert Choir spent nearly two weeks touring Italy where they performed concerts in many of the European country's most historic and majestic churches.

The BHSU Concert Choir has historically traveled to Europe every four to six years, according to Dr. Jonathan Nero, BHSU associate professor of music. The choir, which includes both BHSU students and faculty, performed three formal concerts which included The Church of Sant' Agnese in Rome, The Church of San Leonardo in Cerretto Guidi and at San Moise' Church in Venice. They also performed additional pieces during a mass in St. Peter's Basilica at the Vatican and again for mass at San Marco's in Venice.

"All the concerts were full to capacity and the choir was greeted with standing ovations and calls for encores at each venue," Nero said.

The group, which included more than 50 BHSU faculty, staff, students, and graduates, also had an opportunity to tour several other areas of Italy including: Vatican City where they were part of the Papal audience for Pope Francis and visited the Sistine Chapel; Ancient Rome where they visited the Colosseum, Imperial Forum and Palatine Hill; the Leaning Tower of Pisa; and Florence where they toured the Accademia Gallery which is home to the Statue of David.

The Black Hills State University Concert Choir performs at The Church of San Leonardo in Venice, Italy.

BHSU student's research selected to be presented on Capitol Hill

For three years, Anna Hafele and Dr. Andy Johnson, assistant professor of physics at BHSU, have been researching students' understanding of radiation and radioactivity and how to modify classroom instruction to enhance that understanding.

The culmination of their research was one of 60 projects presented during the Council on Undergraduate Research's (CUR) Posters on the Hill event in Washington, D.C., earlier this spring.

"I was so surprised," said Hafele, an outdoor education and biology major from Newell, of their research being selected out of more than 800 entries. Hafele's poster included a summary of her three years of research and included students' understanding of atoms, ionizing and differentiating between radiation and radioactivity.

Hafele began working with Johnson more than three years ago after taking his intro to physics class. Her interest in the class prompted her to start volunteering in the class and eventually becoming Johnson's research assistant. Their research - sponsored by the National Science Foundation - focuses on non-science majors' understanding of radiation and radioactivity.

The data they have compiled is helping to develop new course material to improve the teaching of this topic, including a computerized atom simulator, which addresses the students' misunderstanding of the concepts.

The Jacket Journal wins first place in national competition

The Jacket Journal, Black Hills State University's student newspaper, earned a first place award in the 2013 American Scholastic Press Association's (ASPA) annual newspaper competition. Each year the ASPA awards the top college and high school literary magazines, newspapers and yearbooks in the country for the work produced by their staffs.

The Jacket Journal was judged in a series of categories including content, page design, general plan, art/ads/illustrations, editing, and creativity.

"In an age of ever-increasing technology and transition to Internet-based news, the first-place award shows that the vitality of The Jacket Journal newspaper is alive and well on campus," said Dr. Mary Caton-Rosser, faculty advisor of the Jacket Journal and assistant professor of mass communication at BHSU.

"The student news organization is thrilled to receive news of the award and will work hard to continue the tradition of excellence."

The student-run newspaper has been recognized by ASPA in the past with a first place in 2009 and 2010, a first place with special merit in 2011 and a second place in 2012.

National Geographic photographer finds interest in BHSU graduate student's research

A BHSU graduate student's research on a rust fungus's ability to manipulate the genes of a wild mustard plant and create a fake flower recently caught the attention of National Geographic.

National Geographic photographer Anand Varma contacted Riston Haugen in June looking for details about an ongoing research project that Haugen is conducting with Dr. David Siemens, BHSU associate professor of biology.

Varma and Haugen connected through Dr. Barbara Roy, who served as Siemens' postdoctoral advisor. Roy, a professor at the University of Oregon, studied the plant interaction in Colorado in the early 90s.

"Varma contacted me about the assignment he was working on, and I arranged to show him around the Black Hills region where the interaction naturally occurs. A few weeks later, we were out in the field searching for specimens to photograph," Haugen said.

Haugen, a graduate student in the BHSU Integrative Genomics program, has been researching the effects the fungus has on the plants for the past few years. He is also working with Dr. Liliana Cano and Dr. Sophien Kamoun at the Sainsbury Laboratory, a plant science research center in Norwich, England, on a parallel study involving pseudoflowers.

"The infection alters host plant development, morphology, and physiology to produce a flower mimic that fools pollinators of neighboring plant species into dispersing fungal gametes," Haugen said. "It is an interesting phenomenon. We are trying to get a better understanding of the extent to which a parasite can manipulate gene expression in its host."

The National Geographic article may not appear for more than a year, Haugen said noting that he is excited to see if the Black Hills research makes it into the final cut.

2013 Swarm Days Olympics

Sept. 30 - Oct. 5

Four honorees will be recognized during Swarm Week activities

Black Hills State University will honor several outstanding alumni during the annual Alumni Awards Luncheon held on campus during Swarm Week.

She continued her art education at the New York Art Students League, and at the New York Studio School of Painting, Drawing and Sculpture. Since then she has been a successful artist exhibiting and selling her creations all over the world. She currently has a studio in NYC and another studio and personal exhibition space on Long Island where she works on her larger pieces including her most recent six-foot-high charcoal piece titled “Peace in Fire.” She is intuitively drawn to subjects of natural and symbolic content including landscapes, American icons such as the American Flag, driftwood, and buddhas. Her color palette is also spontaneously inspired by nature. She finds things on the beach that intrigue her and brings them back to the studio where she can study them and use them as subjects for her drawings and paintings. She loves creating art because it allows her to communicate visually and document her journey.

Lyle Hare Stadium renovations include state-of-the-art artificial field and scoreboard

This summer, 53 years after construction of Black Hills State University's Lyle Hare Stadium, the first steps to the newest and most extensive renovation in the stadium's history officially got underway.

After 111 seasons from 1899-2012 and 881 football games played on natural grass, the first step in the nearly $3 million renovation was completed with the installation of 70,000 square-feet of the newest all-weather, synthetic grass field turf.

Jhett Albers, director of athletics, is pleased with the progress of the renovation project and stressed how beneficial these improvements will be to the entire University and surrounding community, noting the field's improved safety.

"The field will be able to handle more events throughout the year. Having a turf field will allow us to do many things without worrying about ripping up the field for the next group the next day, and the most important part is the safety aspect of this type of field," Albers said.

The new turf has a shock-pad mat system under the artificial grass that will provide a more stable and safer playing field for everyone involved.

Another benefit to the University will be the sustainability, ease of upkeep, and the reduced cost of not having to cut, water or paint the field. The field will also provide the community more opportunity to use it for events outside of sports.

The entire renovation project includes two separate phases of upgrades.

The new field turf is the first project of Phase 1. The second project is a new, state-of-the-art scoreboard and video board located where the current scoreboard is on the field's south entrance. When completed, it will be the largest outdoor scoreboard/video board in South Dakota.

The new field's inaugural home game where the newest additions will be on display for the first time will be on Sept. 21 at 1 p.m. versus Colorado School of Mines

Phase 2, estimated at nearly $2 million, will be the addition or remodeling of the stadium press box and area surrounding the bleachers. Fundraising for this phase will be a continuous effort, and the BHSU Athletics is hopeful to secure the funding to move forward with this project within the next few years.

Albers described the overwhelming support for the renovation and believes the decision to make the upgrades will provide endless benefits to the student-athletes and create a more dynamic fan experience for all Yellow Jacket supporters.

Thanks to our donors

Donations from community members, businesses and organizations have helped fund $1 million in upgrades and renovations to Black Hills State University's Lyle Hare Stadium. Among the gifts are three donations of $100,000 from Dana and LaDawn Dykhouse, Spearfish Forest Products and the White's family of Queen City Motors and Canyon Motors. Other donations include gifts from the City of Spearfish and the Spearfish School District.

BHSU Athletics signs apparel deal with Adidas

Black Hills State University Athletics has signed a deal to partner with sportswear giant Adidas and Universal Athletics to become the sole providers of all varsity sports athletic apparel for the Yellow Jackets.

Adidas will now supply all BHSU game, practice, travel, sideline and coaching apparel.

"We are really excited to enter this partnership with Adidas and Universal Athletics.

It's a wonderful opportunity for our university, community, fans, and student-athletes," said Jhett Albers, BHSU director of athletics.

BHSU chose to make the move to Adidas in an effort to strengthen the Yellow Jackets brand now that they are competing at the NCAA Division II level.

The BHSU community and fan base can now purchase new Yellow Jacket gear through the University Bookstore in Spearfish and online at www.BHSUBookstore.com.

BHSU receives Special Olympics South Dakota 2013 Champion Award

Special Olympics South Dakota (SOSD) recently announced that Black Hills State University has been awarded the 2013 Champion Award for its contributions and support of the organization.

BHSU hosted the 2013 SOSD State Summer Games in May which turned out to be an overwhelming success, according to Special Olympics CEO Darryl Nordquist. BHSU has hosted the state Special Olympics Summer Games the last two years and will host the event again next May.

"What stuck out most for me was the opening ceremony, when our athletes got high-fived by the college athletes in their uniforms, and all the others in the human tunnel - that's what I loved the most," Nordquist said.

This is the second time BHSU has won the Champion Award, an honor annually presented to any business, organization, or media outlet which has made a major contribution to SOSD. The first time the University received the award was in 2002. In total, the Yellow Jackets and the Spearfish community have hosted the games a total of nine times since 1987.

"Out of all the places we visit for tournaments, BHSU goes above and beyond and treats our delegations like champions," said Suzy Gehring, Special Olympics Brookings coach. "From the minute we walk on campus to the day we depart, everyone involved goes above and beyond to make our events run smoothly."

The Brookings team nominated BHSU for the award. Gehring noted that the University's student-athletes provided encouragement and support for the Brookings team and all the other delegations that competed throughout the weekend.

Director of athletics Jhett Albers commended the efforts of everyone involved and was thrilled to hear the news of winning the award for a second time.

"I just want to thank all who were involved in hosting the Special Olympics South Dakota State Games this year. We couldn't be more grateful for this award,"

Albers said. "I hope that every volunteer found it to be as enjoyable, heart-warming, and rewarding as I did after watching these athletes perform. Our Student-Athlete Advisory Committee representatives and the other student-athletes that gave of their time and efforts to this event were amazing."

Yellow Jackets win the 2012-13 RMAC Sportsmanship Cup

Black Hills State University won its first Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference (RMAC) Sportsmanship Cup this year. This is the seventh year of the RMAC Sportsmanship Cup. The 2012-13 season marks the Yellow Jackets first year as full-time members of the RMAC.

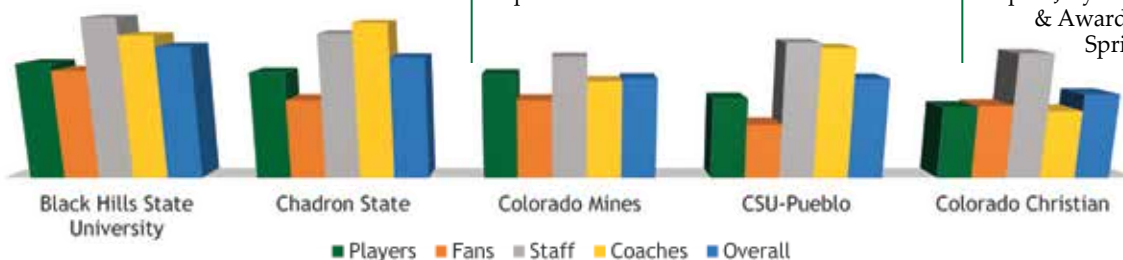

"We are honored to be selected for the 2012-2013 RMAC Sportsmanship Cup Award," said Jhett Albers, BHSU director of athletics. "Sportsmanship is one characteristic that Yellow Jacket Athletics focuses on as an NCAA DII institution and member of the RMAC. Credit goes to our student-athletes, coaches, game day event staff, and fans for their efforts to make sportsmanship a priority at BHSU."

The voting process for the RMAC Sportsmanship Cup is an online system that ranks four game environment factors: players, fans, staff, and coaches. Each category received one ranking from excellent to poor. The head coach and a Student Athlete Advisory Committee (SAAC) member from each school voted per sport on all 21 RMAC sponsored sports.

The Yellow Jackets received an average score of 3.957, and also earned the highest ranking in three of the four categories: Players (3.86), Fans (3.82), and Staff (4.12). Chadron State averaged a score of 4.09 in the Coaches category, followed by the Yellow Jackets 4.02 mark. The Yellow Jackets were presented with the RMAC Sportsmanship Cup in July at the RMAC Hall of Fame & Awards Ceremony in Colorado Springs.

Creating a Legacy

Johnson Family descendants honored as the 2013 BHSU Legacy Family

Black Hills State University honored the descendants of Elmer E. and Martha V. Johnson as the 2013 Legacy Family.

Started in 2008, the Legacy Family Award honors families who have a tradition of attending BHSU.

The Johnsons span two generations of family members who have attended or graduated from BHSU. Twelve descendants of Elmer and Martha Johnson were honored. The first generation of the Johnson legacy at BHSU included: Glenice M. (Johnson) Brown, Attended; Virgil Johnson, Class of '58; Norma (Hupp) Johnson, Class of '60 and '66; Cecil Johnson, Class of '62 and '68; Lorin D. Johnson, Attended; Robert "Bob" Johnson, Class of '63; Barbara (Johnson) Matson, Class of '63; Berle Johnson, Class of '64; Charles "Chuck" Matson, Class of '64; and Lorraine (Johnson) King, Class of '69. The second generation included: E. Orange Johnson, Class of '98; and Sonja Johnson, attended.

Accepting the award on behalf of the family were two future Yellow Jackets: Rian Halligan, the great granddaughter, and Bridger Johnson, the great grandson, of Elmer E. and Martha V. Johnson.

The descendants of Elmer E. and Martha V. Johnson were honored as the 2013 Black Hills State University Legacy Family which honors families who have a tradition of attending BHSU.

Martha V. Johnson was a lifetime believer in the importance of education and hard work, and encouraged all of her nine children to pursue higher education. Eight of the Johnson children attended BHSU with six receiving degrees. All eight worked in various areas of education totaling 234 years in the field. In 1991, in honor of their mother, the Johnson family started the Martha V. Johnson Memorial Book Scholarship fund at BHSU.

Schloes honored as the 2012 Difference Makers during annual dinner

More than 200 people were thanked for their support of Black Hills State University during the 1883 Recognition Dinner.

The annual dinner is a time for BHSU to recognize donors who have contributed $1,883 or more in a calendar year and lifetime supporters of $50,000 or more. The 1883 dinner, named for the University's founding year, was started by BHSU President Kay Schallenkamp in 2007. At that time, the 1883 Club had 51 donors. Today, the club has 140 members – a nearly 200 percent increase in five years.

Last year, the generosity of BHSU's supporters totaled just under a record $5 million, according to Steve Meeker, vice president of University Advancement. "The University is extremely grateful to have such wonderful friends and alumni who are creating great futures for BHSU students. While the gift total for 2012 is wonderful, it's the thoughtfulness of our donors that is truly extraordinary. Our annual donor recognition dinner honors and celebrates those who make a University education possible for so many deserving students."

Junior and Ella Schloe of Spearfish were honored as the 2012 Difference Makers. The Difference Maker Award is given each year to BHSU's top donor. Junior and Ella have lived in the Black Hills and Spearfish area for many years and wanted to give something back to the area that has been so good to them. They have created the Schloe Family Business School Endowment. The endowment will provide business scholarships with at least one dedicated to a Native American student. The fund will also provide a stipend for students to study abroad and a stipend to business faculty for travel, research and scholarly development. Previous Difference Maker Award recipients include: James and Phyllis McDaniel; Donna McLaughlin; Joe and Elaine Floyd; Betty Richey; Harvey and Joy Krautschun; and Dana, LaDawn, Alana and Dan Dykhouse.

Photography program receives final installment of $75,000 donation from longtime supporter

Richard Kessel

For years, Dr. Richard Kessel, professor emeritus of the University of Iowa, has supported the BHSU photography program donating money for new and upgraded equipment, new courses, and funds to subsidize students' photography needs.

"We would not be in the spot we are today without his generosity," said Steve Babbitt, BHSU professor of photography and Kessel's nephew. Kessel died earlier this spring with his final $25,000 donation coming posthumously. Three years ago, Kessel, who had been a professor for 38 years, pledged $75,000 over three years to the BHSU photography program. He had visited BHSU many times and enjoyed the dedication and enthusiasm of the photography students. That dedication motivated Kessel to help the program by making his many contributions to the University.

Those contributions have directly helped BHSU students and the program compete with most any photography program in the country, Babbitt said. The program, which has grown significantly in the last decade, has received national attention for students' work in photojournalism, commercial and fine art photography. This summer, 14 BHSU photography students were chosen as finalists in the 33rd Annual College Photographers Competition by Photographer's Forum Magazine. One student's photo was recognized in the top 100 out of nearly 17,000 submissions worldwide.

"It is clear from their outstanding performance in this year's Photographers Forum competition and over the past 10 years that our BHSU photography students are among the most talented, creative, and hard working in the country," Babbitt said.

Babbitt said he hopes to use some of Kessel's final donation for scholarships. Kessel, who came from a humble background, was initially accepted into medical school; however, financial constraints and a lack of scholarships available during that time caused him to change plans. Kessel's training and research for his doctorate were in the area of cell structure and function and involved the use of the transmission electron microscope – a new and important tool in the investigation of cell structure and function at the time. Kessel also published some 120 scientific research and review articles and five books.

Canadian couple donates horse to Rodeo Team

The BHSU Rodeo Team recently added a new four-legged member - a horse named Leo.

Jim Johnston and Katie Kehrig from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, donated the horse on their most recent visit to the area. The couple became acquainted with BHSU President Kay Schallenkamp and the University's rodeo program during their annual summer visits to the Black Hills, Glen Lammers, BHSU rodeo coach. The couple also donated $5,500 - $5,000 for rodeo scholarships and the remaining $500 to help feed and care for Leo.

"Jim and Katie are interested in rodeo and wanted to donate the horse to help our student athletes as well as to see the horse reach its potential," Lammers said. "It's really a great situation. We are grateful for Jim and Katie's support. Their friendship and generosity is truly a blessing."

Leo is staying with Lammers and his wife in Belle Fourche until the fall semester begins. Then the horse will be moved to the Seven Down Arena outside Spearfish – the practice area for the rodeo team. "We are excited to have Leo join our team and look forward to seeing him develop and get prepared for competition," Lammers said.

Lammers said he will keep Johnston and Kehrig updated on Leo's progress and contribution to the team.

The rodeo team's first competition is in September in River Falls, Wis.

Patricia Noren donates $100,000 for Alumni Welcome Center

Born and raised in Spearfish, Patricia Noren has fond memories of her Midwestern upbringing. She graduated from Spearfish High School, where her mother taught for many years, and earned her teaching degree from Black Hills State in 1952.

Although she left the area soon after graduating, Noren still feels a connection to the Black Hills, Spearfish and the University. In recognition of her time at BHSU, Noren donated $100,000 for the Alumni Foundation Welcome Center, currently under construction.

"I always just thought I would like to do this since I grew up in Spearfish and I have lots of good friends and good memories of that time," she said.

Noren, who lives in Tulsa, Okla., returned to Spearfish five years ago and was overwhelmed at the growth of both her hometown and her alma mater.

"I went back to the college – what a change," said Patricia noting that she was impressed with the amount of programs now offered at BHSU.

After graduating from BHSU, Noren spent a few years teaching in Wyoming before changing her career path to the travel industry where she remained until retiring.

Construction on the $1.4 million, 5,800-square-foot Alumni Center began this summer. When completed, the center will house the University Advancement Office and be a place for alumni and community events, as well as a history of BHSU.

Della Vecchia leaves legacy on BHSU and Spearfish community

Guido Della Vecchia

Guido Della Vecchia, an honorary doctorate of Black Hills State University and integral part of the University and local arts community, died Wednesday, March 13, 2013.

Although a native New Yorker, Guido Della Vecchia spent nearly 30 years in Spearfish creating a life with his wife Johanna Meier.

Guido was a prominent figure in Spearfish and throughout the Black Hills area. He and Johanna moved to Spearfish permanently in 1984, and in 1991, the couple took over the Black Hills Passion Play, the internationally famous production brought over from Germany by Johanna's parents Clare and Josef Meier.

From 1991 until 2008, he acted in and functioned as co-producer of the Black Hills Passion Play. During the 1960s and early 1970s, he and his wife appeared several times in concert at Black Hills State University and arranged for opera performances by a touring company to be held there. They also organized numerous benefits and fundraisers for the Matthews Opera House and the High Plains Heritage Center, with performances by members of the Black Hills Passion Play company. For three years Guido served on the boards of directors of the Spearfish Arts Center and Matthews Opera House, and since its inception, for the Spirit of the Hills Wildlife Sanctuary in Spearfish. He was active in the creation and promotion of the annual Johanna Meier Opera Theatre Institute held each spring at BHSU.

Well known for his beautiful tenor voice, Guido began vocal studies at the age of 18. In 1951, during the Korean War, he was inducted into the army where he was trained as a radio technician. He was then selected as one of six to go to Germany where he sang as an entertainer in special services throughout the country for the remainder of his tour of duty. Upon his discharge, he lived in Italy where he refined his musical art by studying with several of Italy's foremost maestri at the Cherubini Conservatory in Florence. He also attended the University of Perugia, and taught English through the Berlitz schools. Returning to the United States in 1958, he met his wife Johanna, and they continued their vocal careers both jointly and individually. During this time he performed at both Carnegie Hall and Avery Fisher Hall at Lincoln Center in New York, and sang a number of leading Italian opera roles and concerts throughout the United States. His last professional appearances were in 1980, singing with the Seattle Opera Company.

In 2003, BHSU awarded Guido and Johanna with honorary doctorates of humane letters. BHSU has awarded only 11 honorary degrees in its history. Johanna's father received an honorary doctorate of humane letters from BHSU in 1972.

Last fall, the couple was honored with the BHSU Special Service Award during the annual Swarm Day festivities. The award honors alumni or other persons who have contributed long-term service or exceptional efforts in a single program or project to the University.

Looking back

Leave your legacy

During the early and mid-20th century, outdoor festivals including the May Day Celebration took place at what is now Ida Henton Park. This photo, taken circa 1924, shows people watching performers during the May Day Celebration. The photo also shows the State Normal School prior to a fire that destroyed it in January 1925. The arches, the only salvageable piece of the building, are now located in the park next to where the new Alumni Foundation Welcome Center is currently being built. Have fond memories of your time at BHSU? Leave your own legacy and buy an engraved brick to be displayed in the new Welcome Center.
