Announcements

Whaling and Phishing Scams

Be on the alert for whaling and phishing scams that may make it into your email mailbox. Whaling emails are emails that look like they come from a senior executive or a high-level administrator, often asking for money transfers, login information, account numbers, personally identifiable information, credit card numbers, etc. Since the emails appear to be coming from the executive, they are often using an email address that is outside of the university but using the executive's name. If you have the slightest hint that messages are not legitimate, ask the sender in-person or by another means to accurately identify the legitimacy. When in doubt, throw it out.

Phishing messages are different from whaling messages as they do not appear to come from a senior official within the university or organization. Phishing messages are similar whaling messages in that they attempt to gather your usernames and passwords, personally identifiable information, credit card numbers, banking information, etc. Phishing messages also press urgency, including threats of mailbox deactivation, requirements for upgrades, and even threats of "legal" action. Again, when in doubt, throw it out.

You are also more than welcome to send us an email to let us know that a phishing message made it through. If you would like to notify us of a phishing message you may forward it to BHSUhelpdesk@BHSU.edu so we can review it, block the sender, and notify others.

Take a Stand Against Sexual Violence

The Counseling Department will have a table in the Student Union on Monday, March 27th, over the lunch hour to promote taking a stand against sexual violence. Free cookies will be given out and students will be encouraged to sign the banner "We Stand Against Sexual Violence" that will be featured in the Student Union for the month of April. The table will also be an opportunity to learn more about how students can help create a campus free of sexual violence and to learn more about the Bystander Training on April 3rd.

MFA: NOW on exhibit March 20 through April 20, 2017

The Ruddell Gallery at Black Hills State University is pleased to feature the works of current graduate students engaged in MFA programs across the country. With a wide variety of art-making approaches on display, the exhibition offers a thought-provoking experience for students, faculty, and local community members. The locations in which these works have traveled from are as diverse as the subject matter and use of materials themselves. These participants and locations range from Memphis, TN, South Bend, IN, Portland, ME to San Francisco, CA.

MFA: Now 'current collapse' is a juried exhibition with the aim of promoting dialogue while highlighting the current art making practices of MFA candidates. This exhibition is intended to be a reference revealing connections to current graduate students, and the programs they work within, marking a meaningful step further into the art world. The exhibition is intended to celebrate MFA candidates' exceptional curiosity, creativity, and inventiveness, focused in an area of concentration and contemplation, further situating their work within the larger discourse which characterizes the practice of art today.

Geek Speak: Advocating for the Protection of Native Women Through Theatrical, Spoken Word and Slam Poetry Performances

Today, in the United States, one out three Native women will be raped during her lifetime, 60% of Native women will be assaulted in their lifetimes. . . 67% of violent crimes committed against Native women are committed by non-Natives” (Sliver of a Full Moon). Twenty-three percent of violent crimes against Native women by Native men can be linked to inter-generational trauma resulting from the effects of oppression, including the boarding school system. Because of legal loopholes in federal law, like the Major Crimes Act (1885) and Oliphant v. Suquamish (1978), there were no legal protections for Native women who were victimized physically and/or sexually until the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) was renewed in 2013. VAWA offers some protections, but some violent crimes are still omitted. Perhaps worse yet, VAWA only offers protection for Native women living on reservation lands within the continental United States. Alaska Native women and Hawaiian women have been omitted from the protections afforded by VAWA. This Geek Speak seeks to explore the way in which Native women (and men) in the United States are using/used slam poetry, theatrical productions and spoken word videos to advocate for greater legal protections for Native women under VAWA. Specifically, this Geek Speak will address the production of Cherokee playwright Mary Kathryn Nagle’s Sliver of a Full Moon, the spoken word video of Ryan Redcorn’s poem “To the Indigenous Women,” and the performance of Whisper Kish’s slam poem “Violence Against Native Women is not Traditional”, to open up a discussion about the ways in which Indigenous performances represent Native agency and anti-violence activism in the struggle for the protection of Native women and girls throughout the United States.

All lectures are held in Jonas 110 at 4:00 p.m. on Thursdays and are free and open to the public.

Dirt! Movie Night

Dirt! The Movie introduces viewers to dirt’s fascinating history. Four billion years of evolution have created the dirt that recycles our water, gives us food, provides us shelter, and that can be used as a source of medicine, beauty and culture.

Join ESSO, Hills Horizon, and BHSU Sustainability for this enlightening film about the wonders of dirt!

Snacks and refreshments will be provided.
